

NANCY LANGHORNE ASTOR IS WAGING HOT CAMPAIGN

Makes British Public Gasp With Declaration Against Drink Traffic.

SUGGESTS REFERENDUM VOTE

Virginia Woman May Be First of Her Sex to Sit as Member of Parliament—Understands Problems of English Public.

(By Universal Service.)
PLYMOUTH, Nov. 3.—Lady Astor has already thrown her name into the political traditions, and has her own unionist leaders worried.

Indeed, the former Nancy Langhorne, of Virginia, who stands for election to the seat in the Commons, which her husband vacated by going to the States, considers herself as good as elected, as the first woman to sit in the British Parliament, because her husband won more votes than both of his opponents together. So she does not count the cost of hitting straight from the shoulder in typical American style.

The first blow of this independence campaign was her pronouncement on prohibition, in which she said: "I am emphatically not standing as an immediate prohibitionist, but I believe drink is one of the greatest causes of crime, poverty and misery, as well as infant mortality and mental inefficiency, and I do not believe in forced prohibition. If a referendum vote is called on prohibition, that is, if the will of the people is to express itself in favor of prohibition, then it would not be forced."

Since scarcely anybody in Britain favors prohibition, her declaration caused a general gasp. Lady Astor, in an address tonight, said:

"I hesitated long before consenting to stand as a candidate, as I am overwhelmed by the responsibility which under the circumstances will rest upon me as regards the Plymouth woman-kind and my own past work."

She has no personal ambition to enter Parliament, but when representative Plymouth women and so many men friends through most touching personal appeals asked me to stand, when, in spite of my own personal misgivings, my husband told me I could assist the cause we have at heart, I felt that there was only one course for me to take.

"I come before you in all humility, perfectly conscious of my limitations. If you decide that Plymouth shall once again help in making history by being the first constituency with a woman member, I shall do all in my power to maintain the high traditions of the borough and be a credit to Parliament. I intend to work for peace, progress and prosperity, at the same time having due regard for national problems which women, above all, understand."

During the war I worked for the soldiers and sailors and their wives and children, as well as for others serving, and I now ask them to work for me, that I may work for them in Parliament.

I believe I know the problems of life better than any other candidate. Lionel Jacobs, the Independent Unionist candidate, who was feared, might split the vote for Lady Astor, withdrew from the contest today and the prospects of the native American peacemaker are indeed hopeful.
